

The decision to air a personally made partisan documentary free-of-charge to the public on National TV affiliates is a clear example of how corporate media companies are trying to control us -- when, in fact, it should be the other way around. The fact that the FCC has not done anything to reprimand such an action is patly disgraceful and frightening in a country that claims to have a free media -- I presume that the FCC would NOT turn a blind eye to a group that was airing "Fahrenheit 9/11" on it's National TV stations this election year.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard.
